

"Once ripe and dry, the wheat is stored in a wheat barn. These barns are built on stilts to stop the mice from getting in. They are dotted around among the houses and barns; sometimes they are also clustered together on the outskirts of the village. They have a covered balcony that surrounds them where corn, beans and broad beans for the animals dry in the open air."

K. Suter,

Wheat and bread in the Val de Bagnes, Bern, 1944

Streets in bloom, summer 1965