

Until the 1950s Sarreyer's inhabitants farmed every available plot of land and tended the meadows for fodder. The close proximity of the buildings and the narrow streets meant that all the land surrounding the village was available for arable farming.